Are you “Using People” like you should?

Coming Soon: The book that makes you hear old phrases in a completely new way.

Lafayette, LA – Talk behind someone’s back. Judge a book by its cover. Lie to yourself. Give up on your dreams.

You may be surprised by what happens.

The witty and insightful instructions in speaker Aileen Bennett’s new book Using People may catch you off guard. After all, does she really want you to give up on your dreams? Well, sort of.

Using People challenges us all to live a life deeper than the catch phrases. Burned in our psyche since childhood, these phrases have flaws ... and Bennett brings them out in a way that makes you think (and rethink) your own possibilities. Steeped in Bennett’s unique blend of English wit and Southern charm, Using People is sure to shock – then inspire.

About the Author

Bennett is a recovering designer turned cynical speaker who delights and enlightens audiences with classic wit, modern style and a sense of knowing that makes you feel like the universe sent her to speak directly to you. And according to Bennett, it did. She’s appeared on a range of talk shows, keynoted national conferences, coached executives and milked cows before dawn. Her bulletproof enthusiasm continues to inspire others to live happier, more fulfilling lives. For more information on Bennett, visit ThatSpeaker.com.

About the Book

Using People arrives this September during a special event and signing with the author (TBA). Media requests for advanced review copies should be sent to Corvus Press, care of DanMurphy@CorvusPress.com.
